A slice of history

Antiquity

19 AD. A Roman milestone stone dating back to Emperor Tiberius was found on the Via Julia Augusta. The Romans occupied the hill until the end of their reign.

Around 400. The hillside inhabitants moved down to the site of the present-day village, located in a depression.

Middle ages

987. Vallauris was attached to the episcopacy of Antibes.

1038. The bishop and lord of Antibes Aldebert donated Vallauris to the Abbaye de Lérins abbey.

1227. A priory and chapel were built on the site of the present-day château.

1480. The Plague swept across the region, decimating the population. All trade and activity ground to a halt.

Modern age

1501. First habitation act: Lord Raynier de Lascaris brings in 70 families from the Genoa region to repopulate the village.

1568. A Renaissance-style château was built over the foundations of the priory.

Contemporary period

19th

1815. Napoleon landed in Golfe-Juan on 1 March upon returning from the island of Elba. This marked the beginning of the Hundred Days period.

1862. The first train pulled in to the Golfe-Juan station.

De 1870 à 1910. Culinary pottery reached its peak, small workshops turned into industries.

1889. Clément Massier exhibited ceramics with a metallic sheen at the «Exposition Universelle» in Paris.

1896. A port was built.

20th

1904. An orange-grower cooperative, the «Nérolium», was founded.

1932. The Route Napoléon was inaugurated in Golfe-Juan.

1948. Picasso moved to Vallauris.

1949. Picasso gifted his Man with a Sheep statue to the town and was named an honorary citizen.

1949. A media frenzy due to Rita Hayworth's marriage to Ali Khan.

1956. Picasso donated War and Peace to the French state: Vallauris became home to a national museum.

1975. Jean Marais opened an art gallery.

1978. Suzi Magnelli donated some of her husband's works to the town, and a public museum was opened.

1989. The Camille Rayon port and the «Plages du Midi» beaches were created.

1996 et 1998. André Villers and Jean Marais were made honorary citizens.

Today Vallauris continues to foster new talents in a natural continuation of its artistic heritage.

2000 years of pottery

The pottery tradition of Vallauris dates back to the beginning of time itself. In the Gallo-Roman era, the large local deposits of fireclay were used to make bricks and pots. In the 15th century, the plague wiped out local populations, and by the end of the century the area was deemed inhabitable, with only a few dozen families managing to survive in poverty.

The region's lord at the time was a monk from Lérins and the prior of Vallauris. A kinsman of the Counts of Vintimille, Dom Raynier Lascaris had 70 families brought over from his county to rebuild and repopulate Vallauris and farm the local land.

Pottery began being sold here early on, as the habitation act dated 1501 states: "the lord prior shall collect the salt tax for all earthenware vases to be sold in the area known as Vallauris".

At the end of the 16th century, three pottery workshops were operating along the present-day Rue des Tours. In 1829, there were 32.

Despite the growing popularity of artistic pieces in the second half of the 19th century produced by the Massiers, culinary pottery continued to be produced until the early 20th century. The arrival of the railway led to a boom of the industry.

The economic crisis in the 1930s, combined with the use of more appropriate materials such as aluminium, cast iron and stainless steel, resulted in culinary pottery being less highly prized for kitchenware from the late 1940s on. The more whimsical, colourful Provençal pottery pieces flourished. Wood-fired ovens and alquifou meant tableware pieces began being glazed in gorgeous greens and muted yellows.

In 1948, the arrival of Picasso in Vallauris, and the incredible work he produced in the town contributed significantly to a revival of the craft. The painter's popularity attracted hordes of curious visitors and art lovers, with all eyes suddenly turned on vibrant Vallauris, and artists from all around the world flocking to the town to learn more about 'wood-fired crafts'.

The 1950s marked the golden age of Vallauris as a ceramics hotspot, a period in which many major ceramic artists rose to popularity, such as Roger Capron, Jean Derval, Gilbert Portanier, Roger Collet and Jean Marais much later on. Many moved to Vallauris and, like Picasso, chose to work with clay until the end of their lives.

A ceramics capital and listed "French Town of Arts and Craftsmanship", Vallauris remains a hub of contemporary creativity for ceramic arts and craftsmanship.

All you need to know about pottery

D4 The pottery museum

This private museum was founded by a ceramics enthusiast and is a chance to get to grips with all the different stages that go into producing ceramics thanks to the tools and machines on display. The museum is also home to a collection of Vallauris pottery and ceramic pieces from the late 19th-century to the present day as well as wax replicas, produced by the «Musée Grévin», of Picasso and Honoré Camos, a Provençal painter from Vallauris.

A unique artisanal know-how

A listed "Town of Arts and Crafts" thanks to its internationally-renowned ceramics tradition, Vallauris overflows with creativity and attracts crowds of talented artists.

While walking through the city of Vallauris, you will discover the richness and variety of works they create. Works of art, unique pieces or everyday objects, all the pieces are handmade in the city of potters.

In addition to ceramics, there is a lively and diversified craft and artistic activity in the town, olive wood, crystal or even painting and sculpture.

Do not hesitate to push the door of these workshops-boutiques to meet these passionate artists.

To help you discover all the artistic creation of Vallauris, a leaflet entitled - Artists, Craftsmen Boutiques - is available for free in our Tourist offices.

Ceramic life in Vallauris is punctuated by permanent and temporary exhibitions that highlight this activity in terms of heritage and current creation.

C4 Salle Arias Picasso

It is in the heart of Avenue Clemenceau, in the former hairdressing salon of Eugenio Arias, hairdresser and friend of Picasso, that the Association Vallaurienne d'Expansion Céramique (A.V.E.C) regularly organises thematic exhibitions which present the diversity and know-how of our ceramists. You will also be able to discover the linocuts offered by the Spanish master to the AVEC as well as photos and hairdressing equipment which constitute precious memories of that period.

Salle Arias Picasso - 35, avenue Georges Clemenceau - Free admission.

D4 L'atelier Galerie Gilbert Portanier

Gilbert Portanier is one of the ceramists who contributed to the revival of French ceramics from the 1950s to the present day. After studying architecture at the National School of Fine Arts in Paris, he discovered the world of ceramics during a visit to Vallauris and met Picasso. He settled in a traditional, century-old pottery where he had vast workshops in which he applied multiple techniques and created his own language materialised by a graphic design of great freedom.

This place presents the most extraordinary retrospective of the ceramist's work.

Don't miss...

The pottery festival: a large popular and free festival, in the heart of the city centre, entirely dedicated to the know-how of Vallauris, pottery. The programme includes pottery making demonstrations, creative workshops, parades in the town, games and a musical atmosphere. Every second Sunday in August.

The pottery markets: Tableware, decoration, jewellery, artistic pieces, ceramics awaits visitors in all its diversity of uses, techniques and materials.

Two pottery markets are organised each year, one on the occasion of the Pottery Festival in August, the other at Christmas time.

Picasso's ceramic copies

Picasso was one of few artists to agree to have copies of his work made. He believed that in addition to his originals, the latter should be produced in a set number of identical copies. Work on copying his pieces began in the early 1950s and concerned over 600 original pieces.

C4 Man with a Sheep

Picasso's first sculpture to be installed in a public place, as the artist intended, Man with a Sheep watches over the market square and is a focal point for visitors.

It was produced in 1943 and gifted to the town in 1949 as thanks for the warm welcome Picasso received. As a mark of gratitude, the town gave Picasso honorary citizen status.

There are two other copies of this sculpture, one in Philadelphia and the other at the Picasso Museum in Paris.

Linocut inspired Picasso, and he experimented with this technique alongside the printer Hidalgo Arnera. His first designs were featured on posters for the town's bull fights and ceramic exhibitions. He soon turned the technique into an entire art form in its own right, with colour given pride of place.

Picasso in Vallauris works and locations

In 1948, Picasso moved to Vallauris, where he remained until 1955. During his time here, he produced a number of sculptures and paintings, including "War and Peace", one of the period's major works. Two techniques captured his imagination: ceramics and linocut.

"La Guerre et la Paix" (War and Peace)

We are in 1950, in the throes of the Korean War. As a member of the French communist party, Picasso campaigned for the Peace Movement, designing the dove that would go on to be used around the world. He decided to create a monumental artwork that would express his political views.

In 1951, over the course of a dinner in the nave of the castle's chapel held by the Vallauris potters in honour of his 70th birthday, Picasso expressed his desire to decorate the vaults. He had a vision of turning the old deserted sanctuary into a sort of Temple of Peace. And thus, in August 1952, the Spanish master began work on his biggest piece to date: War and Peace!

Following on from Guernica in 1937 and Massacre in Korea in 1951, War and Peace was Picasso's final call for peace. It was definitively installed in the chapel in 1954 and gifted to the French State in 1956, with the latter officially granting the site national museum status - the first of its kind outside of Paris. C4 Madoura, place of art, history and creation

In 1946 at Vallauris' yearly potters' exhibition, a chance encounter with Suzanne and Georges Ramié (the owners of the Atelier Madoura ceramics factory) prompted the ever-curious Picasso to begin experimenting with ceramics. He ultimately decided to pour all his energy into this art form that provided him with new artistic scope. Over a period of around 20 years, he produced nearly 4,000 original artworks. A number of artists including Marc Chagall, Victor Brauner and Matisse, were hosted here by Suzanne and Georges Ramié, leaving their indelible mark on the history of art, ceramics and Vallauris itself.

The Magnelli museum, Ceramics museum

The Vallauris museum has the most important public collection dedicated to the Italian painter Alberto Magnelli (1888 - 1971), a pioneer of abstract art. He sought refuge in Grasse during the second world war and lived there from 1940 to 1970.

This collection is unique and exceptional because it has the particularity of being compiled from "Magnelli's Magnelli", in other words, a group of masterpieces, preserved by the artist as essential milestones of his creation and which allow us to follow his path from "invented painting" to abstraction.

Over the years, it has been enriched with works testifying to the great wealth of Alberto Magnelli's plastic research: prints, collages, slates. Today, this represents a collection of forty-six works, including nineteen oil paintings.

The collections of the Ceramics museum:

A tour retraces the history of ceramics in Vallauris, both industrial and artistic, with in particular the evocation of the Massier family at the end of the 19th century or the artistic effervescence of the 1950s, not forgetting the collections of the International Biennials of Ceramics and Design.

Picasso in Vallauris:

The museum presents a collection of ceramics, linocuts and photographs that testify to the intense artistic activity of Picasso during this period.

Projection of a film retracing Picasso's life during his years in Vallauris through the most emblematic places he frequented.

The National Pablo Picasso Museum "La Guerre et la Paix" (War and Peace)

Spanning over 100m², this monumental painting was created on panels of hardboard, a material flexible enough to be laid over the chapel's vaults.

It was painted in his studio the Fournas, and Picasso worked on flat surfaces rather than a curved shape. Picasso began work in the summer of 1952. Once finished, the two panels were shown in Rome and Milan in 1953. It wasn't until 1954 that they were definitively installed in the chapel. In 1958, Picasso painted a third panel entitled The Four Parts of the World. Designed as a functional component as well as an artwork, the panel was used to block off an old door that once led out to the square. This piece ties the two other panels together and serves as an allegory for universal harmony between peoples.

Golfe-Juan, by the seaside

Fine sandy beaches, exceptional seabeds, two marinas, this is a summary of Golfe-Juan.

Our advice for a successful seaside holiday: lazing on the beaches in the sun, water sports, boat trips...

Beaches

The fine sandy beaches at Golfe-Juan stretch over 3.5km. The plages du Soleil lie to the east of the Old Port towards Cannes, while the plages du Midi are just beyond Port Camille Rayon, on the way to Juan-les-Pins.

The public beaches are supervised by lifeguards over the summer.

The private beaches (open from 15 April to 15 October) offer quality catering and a variety of services: mattress rental, deckchairs, parasols, pedal boats, swimming lessons. Small animals are often allowed.

A leaflet "Private beaches and water activities" is available in our offices.

Golfe-Juan, historic shoreline

On 1 March 1815, at a time when Golfe-Juan was nothing more than a humble fishing village, it was transformed into the stage for one of the Emperor's most incredible adventures: the Hundred Days.

On 26 February 1815, Napoleon and his military staff and a handful of men set off aboard the Inconstant under the cover of darkness, a fleet of seven setting sail around midnight.

On 1 March 1815, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Napoleon arrived in Golfe-Juan. Having armed the bay several years prior to this, he knew it was home to a safe, secure harbour. His goal was to reach Paris as quickly as possible while avoiding resistance from the royalist towns of the Rhône Valley.

He decided to take the Route des Alpes, which was renamed the Route Napoléon in 1932.

Napoleonic vestiges

The Route Napoléon: named thus in 1932, this road is the itinerary that the Emperor took in March 1815, a symbolic route that links Golfe-Juan to Grenoble, passing through some must-see locations along the way, such as Le Cannet, Mougins, Mouans-Sartoux, Grasse, Saint-Vallier-de-Thiery, Escagnolles, and Seranon, as well as many other towns and villages in the Alpes-Maritimes.

E5 Napoleon's Column: Erected in 1815 by the Antibes garrison, the column was pulled down after Waterloo by young men from a neighbouring town.

Reinstated at the dawning of the Second Empire, it was yet again destroyed in 1871 under the Commune, before being fully repaired. It was returned to its original site to the north of the main road leading from Cannes to Antibes, just opposite the coastal road (the present-day Avenue de la Gare), where it remained until 1932.

On 1 July 1932, the Route Napoléon was opened to much fanfare, and the column topped by a Carrara marble bust of the Emperor was inaugurated at its present-day location.

E5 The stele: At Golfe-Juan's port, possibly at the exact spot where Napoleon disembarked, this little monument simply states: "Here disembarked Napoleon on 1 March 1815".

Napoleon in Golfe-Juan: an annual event on the theme of the 1st Empire is organised every first weekend in March. The program includes parades in the town, review of the troops, re-enactment of the landing of Napoleon I, shows, conferences, Napoleonic village...

Stroll through the old town

Devastated by the plague in the 16th century, the village, under the direction of Dom Raynier Lascaris, prior of Lérins and lord of Vallauris, was rebuilt according to a grid plan, which has remained intact to this day. The village is shaped like a trapezium with a square at each corner. The streets are perpendicular to each other, and slope steeply downwards. The houses are modest, but the doorways are often decorated with a stone frame and a cartouche indicating the date of construction.

The Church and Chapel circuit

C4 Sainte-Anne Saint-Martin Parish Church

Rebuilt in 1839, the Baroque-style façade dates back to 1882. The square bell tower contains four bells.

Services: Tuesday 9:30am and Sunday 10:15am.

C4 The Castle chapel

This chapel most certainly dates back to the early 13th century, made from an incredible selection of stones and built in the Romanesque style with a pointed barrel vault.

It is home to the National Picasso Museum.

C4 Chapel of Mercy

This was the former chapel of the Black Penitents, and its year of construction 1664 is engraved on its pediment. The chapel is listed in the Route du Baroque guide thanks to its magnificent altarpiece built in 1724.

E4 Chapel Notre-Dame-des Grâces

This chapel was built in the early 17th century and is home to an impressive altarpiece that dates back to 1694. A more recent archway is thought to have been added in the 19th century.

Service: Sunday 11:30am.

E5 Saint-Pierre Parish church, Golfe-Juan

This church was built in the 19th century thanks to a generous donation made by a lady who held land in the vicinity.

Services: Wednesday and Saturday 6:15 pm
First Friday of every month 6:15pm -Sunday 9am.

Jean Marais

Jean Marais, famous french actor decided to move to Vallauris in 1980 and played an active role in the local community.

For the 15 years that followed, he designed the posters for the pottery tours festival and gifted the council the "La Rebellissime" statue that now towers up over the lower section of the town.

This honorary citizen left this world on 8 November 1998. He now lies in Vallauris old cemetery, in a tomb decorated with his monumental artworks.

Cemetery open daily from 7.30am to 5pm (October/April) until 6pm (May/September)

Unique in France ! L'oranger bigaradier (Bitter orange tree)

The fragrance of its blossoms fills the air come May, and its colourful fruit add a welcome splash of colour against the crisp blue winter skies. But whatever you do, don't try and eat one - these oranges are bitter!

A bit of history

At the end of the 19th century, when a handful of inhabitants of Vallauris Golfe-Juan planted bigaradiers, known as "bitter orange trees", to supply the perfumers of Grasse with flowers, they had no idea that they were building a unique heritage in France, which would be handed down from generation to generation.

In 1904, almost all the producers in the Alpes-Maritimes created the Nérolium cooperative. A first factory was built in Golfe-Juan to transform the perishable product into a storable product. In 1912, the cultivation of the Bigaradier knows its golden age, the fields are enlarged and the harvests are fruitful. A record harvest of 2467 tons of flowers was recorded. In 1920, the Vallauris factory was built.

Today, the producers grouped together in the Nérolium agricultural cooperative still cultivate this orange tree.

E5 Le Nérolium - Visit of the Ecomuseum in Golfe-Juan

Completely renovated, the Golfe-Juan factory houses an ecomuseum dedicated to the distillation of orange blossom. Stills, machines and tools used by the growers at the end of the 19th century to the beginning of the 20th century are presented in a playful and educational way. You will also witness the making of jams in accordance with ancestral traditions. You will find products made from the bigaradier orange tree in the gourmet shop.

A few ideas to complete your stay

Family outings

C6 The «massif du Paradou» departmental natural park

On the heights of Golfe-Juan, a stone's throw from the beaches, the departmental natural park of the Paradou massif, with a surface area of 12 hectares, is one of the smallest parks in the Alpes Maritimes. A pathway allows you to discover the park and the different viewpoints from the Cap d'Antibes to the Lérins islands. The luxuriant vegetation is dominated by giant eucalyptus and mimosas. This park will delight lovers of calm, nature and serenity.

1926, boulevard des horizons - Parking at the park entrance along boulevard des Horizons. Open every day - April /October 7:30am to 8pm - November/March 8am to 6pm.

The «Valmasque» departmental natural park

This 450-hectare park encompasses Vallauris, Valbonne and Mougins councils. This is the perfect spot to enjoy family walks, fitness trails, wildlife observation or simply a picnic in the shade of the majestic trees.

From Vallauris take the RD135 towards Mougins.

Sainte-Marguerite Island

Sainte-Marguerite Island is the largest of the Lérins Islands. A protected natural area, classified as a biological reserve, you can walk along its 20 km of alleys and forest paths planted with maritime pines and eucalyptus. The tour of the island is 8 kilometres long.

It is also a historical site with the Royal Fort where you can visit the prison where the famous "Man in the Iron Mask" was locked up. The island can be reached by boat from Golfe-Juan Ticketing on site and at the Tourist Office.

Leisure and sports facilities

E5 D6 Bike ride

With more than 20 cycle routes, our department is a leading destination for bicycle touring.

From Vallauris, you can reach Cannes and its Croisette thanks to dedicated traffic lanes.

A cycle path links Vallauris to Golfe-Juan via the RD 135 and then between the «Pont de l'Aube» in Golfe-Juan and the Gould roundabout in Cannes (south side of the RD 6007). This 2.6 km section completes "La Littorale", the seaside cycle path that allows you to cycle to Nice from Villeneuve-Loubet.

Maps available in our reception offices.

Note: a repair station and inflation station is located on the car park of the Vieux Port of Golfe-Juan..

Bike hire: Bik'Air offers a fleet of around twenty electric bikes in the commune, 7 days a week and 24 hours a day; no stations or terminals, no subscription; rental €0.15 per minute of use.
